*... Provide sound, and preserve the quiet.
... Allow multimedia in difficult areas.*

Cisco Systems called us with an urgent problem. Noise in their visitor's center was disturbing their guests, and the complaint came straight from top management.

Four plasma screens had been installed in one small room, each with custom-designed, interactive multimedia content. With only traditional loudspeakers, every guest was bombarded with sound from all four stations, creating a distressing environment for their clients and Cisco's management.

The executive originally demanded that these displays be removed entirely, but instead Cisco called us, and we offered a better solution.

We installed a single Audio Spotlight disc over each display, and used a standard ball-socket mount to aim each disc directly at each listening position in front of the screen.

With sound created only by Audio Spotlight systems, only those interested in interacting with the display hear the sound, and the rest of the room remains peaceful, quiet, and professional for everyone.
